

A hive of activity!

THE green-fingered gardeners of Stony are still busy sprucing up the town for this year's Britain In Bloom entry and have given it a theme they hope will keep the place buzzing – bees.

In the quest to make Stony Stratford beautiful, Stony In Bloom has decided attracting bees and butterflies will be this year's theme.

The idea came after the group were alarmed at the falling number of bees in the world. In June, the volunteers will be filling planters with colourful summer flowers to reflect this year's theme.

The Stony In Bloom group, set up in 2007 to improve Stony Stratford, has dedicated its time to extending the town's landscaped areas, in particular the fragrant bee-friendly sensory garden built using the funds donated by the Futures Group after the group's bid to the South East England Development Agency.
